

WHAT IS trio-smart?

Your doctor has requested that you complete a breath test to better understand your GI symptoms. trio-smart is a doctor-ordered mail-in breath test that measures the three primary gases in the gut microbiome: hydrogen, methane, and hydrogen sulfide. Abnormal levels of these gases can indicate treatable gastrointestinal conditions like small intestinal bacterial overgrowth (SIBO), intestinal methanogenic overgrowth (IMO), and excess hydrogen sulfide.

PREPARING TO COLLECT YOUR trio-smart SAMPLES

- If you are taking antibiotics, please consult with your Health Care Provider. They may want you to avoid antibiotics up to 4 weeks prior to collecting your samples per the recommendation of the North American Consensus on Breath Testing for GI Disorders.
- Stop taking anything that helps you make a bowel movement 7 days before collecting your samples if tolerated.
 - This includes promotility drugs, laxatives, and herbal supplements.
 - It is not necessary to stop proton pump inhibitors.
- Please make sure to have your substrate (sugar solution) ready prior to the day of your test. Please note: If your provider ordered lactulose as your substrate, you must fill the prescription included in the kit OR ordered by your provider and sent to your preferred pharmacy. If your provider ordered you a test using glucose, the substrate will be included in the kit.
- You will not have to complete anything else until 24 hours before starting your trio-smart sample collection process.
- Please follow the special diet detailed below the entire day prior to testing. This will ensure the accuracy of the test.

Eat and drink ONLY the following items; do not make any exceptions.

- Meat (Chicken, fish, beef, pork, eggs)
- Tofu
- Potatoes
- White rice
- Only acceptable seasonings:
 - Salt, pepper, any kind of oil

- Water
- Black coffee and tea
 - If you are drinking coffee or tea, do not add any milk, sugar, sweeteners, creamers, or any other additives.

- Fast for 8-12 hours prior to your sample collection. Fasting overnight while you sleep and testing in the morning is the simplest and most convenient way to fast prior to collecting your sample.
- During the fasting period, you should not consume any food or drink except for water.
- You may brush your teeth and use mouthwash as you normally would during the fasting period but do not swallow.
